

The Rome-Chemistry group verified the real time recovery of the native form of HSA in solution starting from the acid unfolded conformation, during a recently developed time-dependent pH-jump protocol. SEC-SAXS experiments on HSA which underwent chemical damage by hypochlorite suggested a recovery of the native conformation in the presence of high salinity and after reaction with reductants, with implications in the reversibility of the process.